Claremont makes an entrance

Royal Liver Building atrium

THE WORK to transform the north/south corridor and the west entrance atrium at the landmark Royal Liver building has now been completed by Claremont Group Interiors.

Appointed by the Royal Liver Group, Claremont was tasked with meeting several objectives in their refurbishment of the atrium, including maximising the entrance's existing features as well as creating a sense of arrival and focus which would complement the building as a whole.

Over a period of 22 weeks, the space was stripped back to the core ensuring that all original features were retained and refurbished. Quality lighting, classic decoration, and graphics were applied to create an elegant and timeless solution appropriate to the iconic building, which is part of the history of the Royal Liver Group and the City of Liverpool.

Peter Fane, Royal Liver Group's head of property, said; "The Royal Liver building has always been an iconic building in Liverpool, but for a long time the interior has not matched the standing of the exterior. The work Claremont has carried out gives a modern twist to the original layout of the building and through sensitive refurbishment the internal area now equals the quality of the external facade.

"In terms of providing commercial space, the Royal Liver has upped its game regarding the quality of its offering and we have seen a marked increase in enquiries over the last few months."
